A Tourist Guide to the District

Kroměřížsko

■ The music of Kroměříž reverberates to this day. The popular music festivals of today are based on the musical traditions of past centuries. For example in the late 17th century the chateau band under the leadership of the kappelmeister and trumpeter Pavel Josef Vejvanovský numbered 36 musicians and was the largest group of its kind in Europe. Come to listen—in the chateau, in the gardens, in the churches and on the squares. The Forfest international festival of contemporary spiritual art, the Music Festival in the gardens and chateau, the International Festival of Military Music and a number of other events, primarily in the summer, resound throughout Kroměříž. They attract visitors as the galleries here do.

Kroměříž is unique to culture and art, for which it is called the Athens of Haná. Here is the Kroměříž District Museum with archaeological and natural history exhibitions mapping the prehistoric and Slavic settlements, the Rise and Fall of Kroměříž and its surroundings. It also hosts the Max Svobinsky Memorial, mapping the development of the significant Czech painter and graphic artist in six rooms. Works such as the Blue Portrait, the Yellow Portrait, Atlas, and many woodcuts and booklets and stamp designs are just a sample of the rich work of this Kroměříž native on display here. Svobinsky's legacy is on display throughout Kroměříž: in the Na Ústředí precinct, the former Franciscan monastery, where Svobinsky spent his youth; there are four of his mosaic lunettes, originally intended to decorate the National Theatre in Prague.
